Scriptures

Isaiah 49:1–7 This is the second of four passages identified as the Servant Songs in the book of Isaiah, which tell about God’s call. In this song, the servant is encouraged to use their voice to speak to Israel and to the nations.

Psalm 40:1–11 Praising God’s steadfast love, the psalmist recounts how God listened and encouraged them. In response, the psalmist willingly tells others about God’s righteousness and faithfulness.

1 Corinthians 1:1–9 Writing about his call, Paul demonstrates his thankfulness for the church at Corinth, encouraging them and reminding them of God’s faithfulness and of their call.

John 1:29–42 The writer of John connects Jesus’ baptism with the calling of the disciples. John the baptiser names Jesus as the ‘Lamb of God.’ John’s disciples respond with curiosity, and Jesus invites them to ‘come and see.’ Along the way, Simon is given a new name—Peter—a sign of who he is becoming.

Theme Focus

As Isaiah sings of a servant called before birth and Jesus invites the first disciples to ‘come and see,’ we are invited to listen and respond to how God is naming and calling us today.

Word for the Day

In Isaiah 49, the servant is called and named by God, entrusted with a purpose. God's call is both deeply personal and expansively communal.

In John 1, John the baptiser names Jesus 'Lamb of God.' The curiosity of John's disciples leads them to follow Jesus, who invites them to 'come and see.' Simon is renamed Cephas/Peter, showing that God's call recognises our potential—who we are becoming. Following Jesus begins with curiosity and invitation.

Baptism tells us that we, too, are named and called as Christ's body. God invites us not only to hear but to respond—to live as people through whom the light of God's love shines.

Ideas for Reflection

- The readings from Isaiah and John show a variety of names: Servant, Israel, Lamb of God, God's Son, Rabbi, Messiah, Christ, Simon/Cephas. Reflect on how each of these names tells us something about the person to whom it is applied.
- What difference does it make to know that God calls you by name?
- Where do you hear God's call in your life right now?
- How might our community 'come and see' where Jesus is in our neighbourhood?
- How might God's light and love be made known through God's people today? (Isaiah 49:3)

I don't ever crave extraordinary moments anymore.
Just small, gentle
hums of beauty
streaming from below, above, and beyond simply
from paying attention.
Sound. Light. Shadow.
Art. Warmth. The night.
The morning. Dreams that are not faraway but exist right here –
already in my days,
hands, and heart.
